GLASS ISLAND BOAT ANCHORS. THEN GOES SHORE.

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 5.—A boat with 400 passengers, including 100 women and children, was anchored in the Hudson river at Glass Island, N. Y., last night.

A house of 400 people rolled up through the night, and the boat was anchored in the Hudson river at Glass Island, N. Y., last night. The boat was anchored in the Hudson river at Glass Island, N. Y., last night.

At first it did not bother her seriously, for the pilot was still able to make out the lights on the shore and could keep his bearings. In a few minutes, however, it was impossible to see a person standing a few feet away from you on the dock.

At first it did not bother her seriously, for the pilot was still able to make out the lights on the shore and could keep his bearings. In a few minutes, however, it was impossible to see a person standing a few feet away from you on the dock.

The tide at this time had begun to sweep out, and Capt. Boyle made up his mind that it would be extremely dangerous to take his boat through Hell Gate with all those passengers aboard, even if he got that far without accident.

The women in the meantime had become pretty anxious about the situation. It was apparent to them that all that body in the boat was where they were. The fog was damp and disheartening, especially when you knew that the folks at home would begin to worry about you.

At 11 o'clock a blizzard of light suddenly was seen off the East River, just south of New Rochelle. Some boys who were camping on the beach had built a big bonfire. The engines were stopped and the anchor let go when the Sea Gull was about 100 feet off the shore of the island.

Two launches came along in a minute or so and gave the captain his bearings. They were the first people spoken after the ship had left the island and they served at least to buoy up the passengers' spirits. The launches were from City Island. They had been attracted by the Sea Gull's whistle, which had been blown incessantly.

On the boat was Policeman John W. Izuel of the Glen Island station, who had been assigned to watch the boat as it went down the East River. He was in the boat when it was anchored in the Hudson river at Glass Island, N. Y., last night.

A gang of twenty or more toughs from the East Side were hanging about the boat and adding greatly to the confusion by shouting that the boat was going down. They pulled out life preservers and began to throw them about. The women were by this time so nervous that most of them were crying and some of the men passengers were in a state of alarm.

A large party stood in one of the cabins at the foot of East Thirty-first street at half past 11 o'clock in the morning, almost twelve hours later. The boat was anchored in the Hudson river at Glass Island, N. Y., last night.

At half past 11 o'clock the steamer was floated by the incoming tide and was able to go on down the Hudson river. The boat was anchored in the Hudson river at Glass Island, N. Y., last night.

A boy who arrived on a bicycle, went through an apartment and when discovered tried to get away on the bicycle in girls' clothes, distracted Buffalo avenue, Brooklyn, yesterday morning and furnished the neighborhood with a topic for the rest of the day in so far as the thundering Long Island Railroad trains on Atlantic avenue permitted of oral intercourse.

The boy was first spotted by Tom McCarthy in the McCarthy rooms on the first floor of 136 Buffalo avenue. He had put on McCarthy's sisters' clothes and was just gathering a few rings and stockings to take with him.

McCarthy ran after him, but instead of conserving his wind he did not permit second intervals. The boy on the bicycle was hampered by Miss McCarthy's skirt. She had recently hobbled it by a series of minute tucks in the back.

McCarthy took the picture hat, the jacket and the rings and stockings home. The police asked to keep the skirt as evidence and Miss McCarthy, viewing it, said they might.

THIS BOY A BAD ONE. Knocked Mother Down With Blackback and Then Broke Up the Furniture.

Myer Cellivitz, 17 years old, was in the night court last night charged with assaulting his mother and breaking up most of the furniture in their apartment at 106 East Ninth street.

Myer preferred to sleep on the roof. He came down about noon, met Louis and hit him in the stomach with a blackback. When the older brother came back with a policeman he found Myer smashing the furniture and Mrs. Cellivitz unconscious from a blow of the blackback.

Magistrate Appleton sentenced Myer to an indeterminate term in the Hart's Island Reformatory, which may last four years. As Myer was led away he kicked Louis in the stomach and then hit him in the chin with his head.
